
Susan E. Sitter

Indiana University of Pennsylvania
ROSA PARKS 1913-1955: HOW FAMILY, EDUCATION, RELIGION, AND SOCIO-POLITICAL INFLUENCES SHAPED HER LEADERSHIP

A Dissertation
Submitted to the School of Graduate Studies and Research in Partial Fulfillment of the Requirements for the Degree
Doctor of Education

Susan E. Sitter
Indiana University of Pennsylvania
August 2014
Indiana University of Pennsylvania
School of Graduate Studies and Research
Department of Professional Studies in Education

We hereby approve the dissertation of

Susan E. Sitter

Candidate for the degree of Doctor of Education

________________________________________  ______________
Cathy C. Kaufman, Ph.D.
Professor of Education, Advisor

________________________________________  ______________
Kelli Paquette, Ed.D.
Professor of Education

________________________________________  ______________
Jennifer Rotigel, Ed.D.
Professor of Education

ACCEPTED

________________________________________  ______________
Timothy P. Mack, Ph.D.
Dean
School of Graduate Studies and Research
This study identified the family, education, religious, and socio-political influences of Rosa Parks that shaped her leadership prior to her refusal to move from her seat on the bus on December 1, 1955. Women of color living in the Black belt of America faced the risk of sexual violence, health care disparities, and poverty from the time of slavery and throughout the Jim Crow years. Yet, they did not give up, rather they employed these challenges to drive their activism, and empower them to seek justice and equality for all people (Sua, 2012).

A qualitative research design with a narrative approach and interpretive biographical lens was utilized to re-story the personal experiences of Rosa Parks. Archival data relating to Rosa Parks’ life and events from 1913 until 1955 were examined and analyzed for emerging themes in the studied areas of influence, and exposing what Creswell (2007) terms epiphanies or turning points. Specifically, the study analyzed the influences in Rosa Parks’ life prior to her bus resistance through the leadership frameworks of Greenleaf (1977), Sipe and Frick (2009), Burns (2003), Gardner (1995), and Heifetz (1994).

The research revealed that courageous leadership and activism of Parks, despite the dangerous environment of the Jim Crow South, was fostered by the powerful influences of family, education, religion, and socio-political factors. Politically minded and supportive family, education, faith and prayer, other leaders and activists, and the challenging environment itself may advance leadership for women living and working in similar challenging circumstances.
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This work is dedicated to the loving memory of my parents who would have been incredibly proud of this accomplishment.

To my husband, Pete, without your love and support this would not have been possible. You are my best friend and incredible research assistant.

To my sons, Ryan and Sean and wives Lynnsey and Kate, much love for your constant words of encouragement.

I would also like to thank the incredibly helpful archivists I encountered in this journey, including those at the Walter Reuther Library, at Wayne State University and the Wisconsin Historical Society. Your patient assistance was very much appreciated.

Thank you to Dr. Jeanne Theoharis for graciously consenting to be interviewed. Your insight and knowledge greatly enriched my study.

I owe my deepest gratitude to my committee, especially Dr. Cathy Kaufman who, along with Dr. Kelli Paquette and Dr. Jennifer Rotigel, are amazing role models and who provided constant support and encouragement on this journey.